Lessons Learned from the Evaluation of Pennsylvania's Federally Funded Home Visiting Programs

View Webinar

Home visiting services are voluntary, in-home services provided to under-resourced pregnant moms and families of young children. To understand how these programs are faring in Pennsylvania, PolicyLab has partnered with Pennsylvania's Office of Child Development and Early Learning (OCDEL) on the evaluation of Pennsylvania's MIECHV-funded home visiting programs since 2011. This large-scale, mixed-methods study includes a comprehensive examination of these programs' impact on the lives of the families they serve that has led to an understanding of the strengths and weaknesses of wide-spread implementation of home visiting services. Following the completion of this rigorous evaluation and the publication of several journal articles detailing individual findings, PolicyLab produced a webinar about the discoveries and how the Commonwealth is using the evaluation to ensure these programs meet the needs of families.

Authors: Meredith Matone, Katherine Kellom

Related Content

- Two Models, One Site: The Benefits of Co-locating Home Visiting Services
  Blog Post
  Aug 06, 2018
- Policies Can Help Ensure that Vulnerable Mothers Don't Put Their Own Health on Hold
  Blog Post
  Jul 13, 2017
- MIECHV: A Model for Evidence-Based Policymaking
  Blog Post
  Sep 28, 2017
- A Mixed Methods Evaluation of Early Childhood Abuse Prevention Within Evidence-based Home Visiting Programs.
  Article
  Jun 2018

- Innovations in Evidence-based Home Visiting Intended to Engage and Support Families Impacted by Opioid Use Disorder: Three Case Studies from Pennsylvania Pilot Programs
  Article
  Jan 2023